ABSTRACT

The care and education of children is a primary task of all societies, and the role of parents, families, and communities is essential in this process. This directory describes the major activities of 218 non-governmental and governmental organizations, based in 38 Latin American and Caribbean countries, involved in early childhood care and education. Pertinent data on these organizations' young child, family, and community programs are included. The directory is intended for professionals working with and for children, to facilitate communication and information-sharing to improve the situation for children. Directory information was compiled through a questionnaire sent to 780 organizations in Latin American and Caribbean states. Two articles in the directory provide an overview of the situation for children and their families, and challenges and opportunities in Latin America and the Caribbean. Tables present an overview of basic social and economic statistics by country, directly concerning the 0-5 year age group. Profiles are arranged alphabetically by country and official organization name and include the following: (1) identification and contact information; (2) aims, type, and countries of action for the organization; (3) cooperation/partnership activities; (4) major activities in the young child, family, and community programs; and (5) the services and information activities offered. Five indices facilitate information retrieval. Included in the annexes are the main provisions of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. (KB)

Foreword

As today's children are the citizens of tomorrow's world, their survival, protection and development is the prerequisite for the future of humanity. Empowerment of the younger generation with knowledge and resources to meet their basic human needs and to grow to their full potential should be a primary goal of national development. As their individual development and social contribution will shape the future of the world, investment in children's health, nutrition and education is the foundation for national development. (Plan of Action of the 1990 World Summit for Children)

All nations are responsible for their children, and for the welfare of those who contribute, directly or indirectly, to the child's development and environment. The care and education of children is a primary task of all societies, and the role of parents, families and communities is essential in this process. Early childhood programmes actively seek out and build on existing inherent strengths in families and communities, as well as responding to their diverse needs.

A young child's development does not occur in isolation. It is strongly affected by its family and community, which continue to influence the child's later learning achievement in terms of enrolment, progress and performance in school. The care and education (including health, nutrition, attention and stimulation) a young child receives from birth depends very much upon the parents, family and community. This depends not only on availability and on the abilities of parents and caregivers, but also on access to services that can help the child and support parents in their role and function of parenting.

Many governments have started to raise their targets substantially. Children's needs do not have to be met exclusively by formal government funded programmes. Many countries with limited national resources have been successful in forming alliances among Ministries of Education, Health and Social Welfare or with local government, NGOs, private enterprises and local communities, in order to set up successful, low-cost early childhood programmes.

As illustrated in this publication, early childhood programmes are provided in a variety of institutions and organizational settings, such as preschools, kindergartens, nurseries, day care centres, or play groups. These programmes are organized by various Ministries and agencies concerned with the education, development, care and welfare of young children, by non-governmental institutions (such as NGOs, religious groups, women's associations or universities), as well as by parent and community groups. These various organizations direct their early childhood interventions towards all aspects of the child's environment - parents, families, communities, as well as professionals, paraprofessionals and decision-makers who intervene in the child's life.

We trust that the information made available in the present Directory will facilitate contacts among institutions and individuals working in the field of early childhood and convince them of the convergence of their interests and the need for concerted efforts to ensure a fair start for children.

UNESCO Activities in Early Childhood

Principle for action

Learning begins at birth. (Article 5 - 1990 Jomtien World Declaration on Education for All)

Early Childhood Care and Education is an integral part of basic education and represents the first and essential step in achieving the goals of Education-for-All. Recent world conferences testify to a growing appreciation of the crucial importance of the child's earliest years, and of the need to support families and communities in their role as the child's most influential educator. The learning capacity and value orientations of children are largely determined by the time the child reaches the age of formal schooling. For this reason, any sustained effort in Education for All must set targets and programmes for early childhood and attempt to raise the life-skills level of families.

Improving children's health and nutrition is necessary, but increasingly, in a situation where fourteen out of fifteen of the world's children survive until the age of one, governments and civil society are turning their attention to the psycho-social and cognitive development of children. Well conceived quality early childhood programmes help meet the diverse needs of young children during the crucial early years of life, enhance their readiness for schooling, have a positive and permanent influence on later schooling achievement. In addition, countries that succeed in mobilizing local government, municipalities, communities and voluntary organizations in the care and education of young children have been able to decentralise and innovate in their educational systems and, at the same time, make an important contribution toward population information and family education.

Goals and objectives

Within this context, UNESCO intervenes at various levels:

- at the interagency level, by participating in United Nations or other international initiatives in favour of children and families;
- at the intergovernmental level, by encouraging governments to integrate early childhood and family education programmes in their long-term social and economic planning;
- through technical assistance in the design, development and implementation of integrated early childhood programmes; as well as contributing to the improvement of the child development skills of parents and caregivers by encouraging child care information and education services, and community-based family support programmes;
- by acting as a networking centre and clearing-house on information about early childhood care and education systems, organizations, policies, programmes and activities.

UNESCO's Young Child and the Family Environment Unit

Established by the UNESCO General Conference in November 1989, the Young Child and the Family Environment (YCF) Unit co-ordinates research, activities and initiatives undertaken by UNESCO in early childhood care and education, parent and family education, and in favour of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. UNESCO seeks to:

- improve access to early childhood care and education by making such programmes more widely available and accessible, and improving school-readiness;
- support family education and policy formulation by encouraging the participation and promoting the role of families and communities in basic education programmes;
- improve the content of early childhood programmes, in particular their design and quality;
- redirect and strengthen early childhood training programmes;
- strengthen the information base on early childhood by improving the availability and quality of information, research and data on young children and their families;
- promote legislation on behalf of children and families, in particular the Convention on the Rights of the Child, through awareness raising and advocacy;
- collaborate in artistic, intellectual and cultural events promoting reflection on childhood and family issues.

Early Childhood Interventions

With the help of its specialized services, its roster of consultants, its partnership with sister agencies of the United Nations - in particular UNICEF and WHO - and the co-operation of major institutes and NGOs, UNESCO provides various services to its Member States, UN Agencies, foundations, organizations and individuals working in favour of children and families. Some of its activities include:

- supporting early childhood development/family education programmes in the Middle East, the Pacific, Latin America and South East Asia;
- publishing information and research results on early childhood topics, such as:
  - Enhancing the Skills of Early Childhood Trainers, a training pack for the training of trainers produced with the Bernard van Leer Foundation
  - Toward a Fair Start for Children: Programming for Early Childhood Care and Developement in the Developing World by Dr Robert Myers, already published in Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Hindi, Indonedian, Russian, Portuguese, Spanish and Thai.
- creating graduate-level diplomas in early childhood in selected universities in Brazil, with the Centre International de l'Enfance;
- sponsoring sub-regional training workshops for administrators in policy and organization of informal early childhood development systems in the Pacific, Africa and the Middle East;
- strengthening or establishing regional Early Childhood Co-operating Centres in Europe and Francophone Africa;
- undertaking a national inventory of early childhood resources in Burkina Faso to reinforce national capacity and potential in the care and education of young children.

Family Education and Early Childhood Development

Systemic early child development programmes are an excellent investment for States, in that they raise significantly the health and educational levels of young children and allow women to enter the labour market. Children, however, always need the security and orientation which the home provides, nor should it be forgotten that societies are founded on the quality of the homes and families of which they are composed. Family education

- provides parents with the necessary knowledge and skills to raise their children successfully;
- builds up self-reliance, networking and social consciousness among parents.

Member States have much to gain from promoting family education. In situations where it is impossible to set up early childhood, centre-based programmes funded by the State, excellent child care and education can be provided through educating parents and supporting their initiatives at community level. UNESCO recommends State support for family education not only as a fruitful investment in children but also as a means of raising the educational level of a country as a whole. In a context dominated by rapid social change and by the expansion of scientific and technological knowledge, parent education is a first step toward supporting community development and education. In the past three years, the Organization has supported over twenty different projects in Member States worldwide focusing on the development and education of families and young children.

Children's Rights Initiatives

The Articles of the Convention which present a particular challenge to UNESCO are those relating to education (Articles 27, 28 and 29) and culture (Articles 12, 13, 14, 17, 28, 29, 30 and 31). UNESCO promotes the Convention on the Rights of the Child by :

- acting as a focal point for enquiries concerning the Convention, sending out literature and attempting to attend the more important meetings on the Convention convened by the United Nations and NGOs;
- providing assistance to the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child in monitoring the Convention, in particular as it relates to education and culture.
- helping to translate the Convention into national languages.

- contracting original materials on the Convention, especially publications and booklets prepared for or by young children;
- assisting governments and non-governmental organizations in publishing children's versions of the Convention and guidebooks for teachers;
- co-sponsoring meetings on the Rights of the Child with the International Institute for Human Rights Studies (Trieste), the UN Centre for Human Rights (Geneva), the Arab Institute of Human Rights;
- co-operating with UNICEF on matters pertaining to the Convention, within the framework of early childhood education;

Early Childhood Information/Documentation Activities

To create opportunities for institutions and individuals to learn about each other's needs and actions, enhance information exchange on early childhood, and build up active relationships to benefit young children and their families, UNESCO:

- collects, compiles and disseminates basic information on early childhood care and education systems, organizations and curricula;
- maintains a data bank of early childhood care and education information;
- produces practical directories, publications, briefs and reports on early childhood care and education systems, organizations, curricula or policies;
- provides input into, and support for, selected professional journals and reviews, such as the Interagency Consultative Group on Early Childhood Care and Development's Coordinator's Notebook.

The YCF Databases

The YCFE International Database - In an effort to foster and facilitate inter-institutional collaboration, the Young Child and the Family Environment (YCFE) International Database was set up in 1990. The Database contains information on some 1500 organizations in 146 countries of the world, involved in early childhood care, development and education, and focuses on activities aimed at the Young Child, the Family and the Community. The organization profiles are both general (as to the institution's name, address, contact person, number of staff) and specific (regarding the major foci of activities, types of activities, including grant-making and information activities, and regions of activity, as well as funding sources, partnership links and target groups).

The ECCE Database - The Early Childhood Care and Education (ECCE) Database was set up in 1993. The Database contains information on early childhood care and education policies, legislation, partners and major activities in 116 countries, along with pertinent data on publications and databases concerned with early childhood issues. Each country profile contains information on the national policy on early childhood, the coverage and supervision of programmes, major actors and partners, issues and problems encountered, successful initiatives, staff training and qualifications, as well as on parent/community involvement in activities and media/information actions in favour of young children.

The YCF Directories

Information from the YCFE International Database was used to publish the Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Sub-Saharan Africa (1992), the Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in the Arab States (1995) and the Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Asia and the Pacific (1995). The current Directory on Latin America and the Caribbean is a continuation of the series of Regional Directories started with the volume focusing on Sub-Saharan Africa.

The Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Latin America and the Caribbean

The Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Latin America and the Caribbean describes the major activities of 218 non-governmental and governmental organizations, based in 38 countries in Latin America and the Caribbean and involved in early childhood care and education, along with pertinent data on their Young Child, Family and Community programmes and their information activities. This publication aims to be an important information source for professionals working with and for children, and to encourage and facilitate communication and information sharing between institutions and individuals active in improving the situation of children. It seeks to give a just insight into the national, regional and international contributions to early childhood activities in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Methodology
The information presented in the Directory was compiled through a questionnaire survey sent to 780 organizations in Latin America and the Caribbean. The information contained in the profiles was provided by the organizations themselves. All responsibility for this information thus remains with the organizations responding to the survey. The objective of this publication has been to make available, rather than evaluate, the data thus provided. This survey, which covered a period of approximately seven months, was complemented by information from other relevant sources.

Update
Although the data contained in this Directory has been repeatedly checked, errors and omissions may still exist. All modifications and additions should be entered on the questionnaire included in the volume and returned to the address provided. This sample questionnaire is included to encourage users to complement and update the information provided, and to offer those organizations which are not included the chance to be considered for future editions. An evaluation form is also included to help improve future editions of the Directory. Users are invited to complete this form and return it to the address provided.

Sections of the Directory

Articles
Two articles offer an overview of the situation of children in Latin America and the Caribbean and of their family environment in general, and provide an analysis of the information collected in the Directory.

Statistical Tables
Before presenting the different organizations in each country, statistical tables give an overview of the basic social and economic statistics available by country, which directly concern the 0-5 age group and their families.

Profiles
The profiles are arranged alphabetically by country and by the official name of the organization. A reference code assigned to each profile is listed above the official name. This code is used in the indexes to refer to the organization, rather than the page number on which the profile is found.

Each profile contains five types of information about the organization: a) identification and contact fields; b) the aims, type and countries of actions of the organization; c) information concerning the co-operation/partnership activities of the organization; d) the major activities within the Young Child, Family and Community programmes of each organization; e) the services and information activities offered by each organization.

Identification fields
Practical information on each organization is provided, including the official name and translation; acronym when it exists; address; telephone, telex, cable, telefax and E-mail numbers; and contact name.

General information fields
The major aims of the organization are listed, along with the type of actions it undertakes and the countries in which it is active. The foundation date, the number of staff of the organization and its budget are also provided.

Co-operation/partnership fields
Information is provided on the organization's links with other institutions and different communities, as well as on the extent of its membership, and its affiliation to networks.

Major action fields
Under the headings Young Child Programmes, Family Programmes and Community Programmes, the activities of the organization are listed according to the main foci of its programmes. The target populations for these programmes are also indicated.

Services & information activities fields
When applicable, details of the services, publications and materials the organization provides are listed, as well as details on its information activities.

Information Lists/Bibliographies
The following information lists and bibliographies are included at the end of this publication to help users gain knowledge of potential funders of early childhood activities and of other information sources on early childhood issues:

- UNESCO National Commissions in Latin America and the Caribbean
- United Nations Information Centres in Latin America and the Caribbean
- Organizations/agencies involved in social and economic development in Latin America and the Caribbean
- Selected publications on early childhood care and education

Indexes
The following indexes are included at the end of this publication to facilitate information retrieval:

- an Acronym Index
- a Type of Actions Index
- a Focus of Programmes Index
- an Index of Services Provided
- a Geographical Coverage Index

For example, organizations working on child-to-child projects are identified by profile code in the Type of Actions Index under the heading Child-to-Child. Users can then refer back to the profiles to locate the organizations corresponding to these codes. In addition, an alphabetical listing of the official names of the organizations included in the Directory is provided, as well as a similar listing arranged by country in which the organization is located.

Acknowledgements
We would like to thank all the organizations which answered the questionnaire for their co-operation in providing the information for this publication, and for putting us in contact with other organizations involved in early childhood care and education activities. Furthermore, we acknowledge with many thanks the assistance of UNESCO's Regional Office for Education in Latin America and the Caribbean (OREALC) in dispatching the questionnaires, as well as the co-operation and encouragement of UNESCO National Commissions and UN agencies field offices in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Early Childhood Care and Education in Latin America and the Caribbean: Survey Findings

The responsibility of caring for and assisting children, their families and communities in Latin America and the Caribbean is shared by a variety of non-governmental and governmental organizations. Each of these organizatioins plays an important role in using the available resources to meet the health, welfare and educational needs of children and their families.

This regional survey of organizations involved in early childhood care and education in Latin America and the Caribbean elicited responses from 218 organizations in 38 countries. Their answers to the Questionnaire (a copy of which is included with the Directory) provide examples of many of the issues raised in the article, Early Childhood in Latin America and the Caribbean: Challenges and Opportunities, and offer an insight into their goals and actions. These organizations recognize that their actions need to involve not only children but also parents, families and communities in order to create an appropriate environment for the healthy development of children.

The survey highlights their activities in the following three programme areas: the Young Child, the Family and the Community. While some of the organizations focus on only one of these areas, most undertake activities in all three. Experience has shown that activities, which attend to needs in the three areas, obtain more holistic and long-lasting results. Each of the organizations included in this Directory has its own approach to meeting the needs of the child, its family and community in Latin America and the Caribbean. Their combined efforts work to improve the well-being of the child within its family and community. Whatever their approach, the organizations recognize that provision of basic services (such as health care, clean water supplies, nutrition, education, and welfare services) is essential to ensure a fair start for children. This summary of responses highlights issues that are of major concern to individuals and organizations working in this field in Latin America and the Caribbean by demonstrating the 'who, for whom, what, how and with whom' of their actions.

The organizations

Of the 218 organizations in the Directory, 42% are non-governmental, non-profit organizations; 39% are research institutes, training organizations, schools and universities. The remaining 19% includes Ministries and governmental agencies, foundations, hospitals/medical centres and women's groups. The findings illustrate the wide variety of organizations that are responsible for current actions in the field of early childhood. These actions are carried out by some 132,070 staff members of whom 38% are non-salaried.

The beneficiaries

The responses also help to understand for whom the activities are undertaken. There seems to be an equal interest in activities focusing on the three main programme areas: the Young Child, the Family and the Community.

Those organizations which work with young children work more with children aged four to six than with infants or two to three year olds. There is a tendancy to focus more on children in urban settings (42%) than on children in rural settings (33%). Equal attention is given to girls and boys (both 34%). Over two fifth of the organizations which assist children target their activities towards families and parents.

Looking at the responses of organizations working on family programmes, families in urban areas (39%) receive more attention than families in rural areas (34%). 33% of the organizations focus their family-oriented activities on women, while only 20% target men. Furthermore, two fifths of the organizations target their actions on the community, while a third provide assistance to working parents and paraprofessionals.

Looking at community programmes, 36% of the organizations work with urban communities and 32% with rural communities. Thus in all three programme areas, the urban setting is more favoured than the rural setting by a small, but consistent percentage. Children and parents receive nearly equal attention, as do poor communities and families, while over a third work with youth and community leaders.

The type of activities

Responses provided information on the type of activities the organizations undertaken for their Young Child, Family and Community programmes. Activities were divided into eight main categories: Research, Training, Policy, Programmes/Projects, Services, Publications/Materials, Networking and Grant-making.

Each of these main categories was chosen by over half of the organizations, except for grant-making which is only undertaken by 17% of the organizations. Training was selected by 95% of the respondents, Programmes/Projects by 93%, Research by 81%, Networking by 74%, and Policy by 73%. It is interesting to note that sligthly more organizations work in the area of Services (53%) than in Publications/Materials (both 49%).

Within these main categories, the following activities were cited the most often: programme/project implementation (90%), training of parents (70%), applied research (54%), meetings/workshops (49%), policy development (46%), provision of services (45%) and publications/materials preparation (39%).

The focus of actions

Respondents provided information on the focus of their actions within their Young Child, Family and Community programmes. Actions in favour of the child were divided into four main areas: child health and development, child care and education, child at risk, and child advocacy. Activities relating to the family were divided into four main areas: family health and welfare, family education and awareness, family at risk, and family advocacy. Actions concerned with the community were divided into four main areas: community welfare and involvement, community development and awareness, community livelihood, and community advocacy.

Each of these main areas was chosen by over a third of the organizations. Child Health and Development was selected by 86% of the respondents, Family Education and Awareness by 76%, and Community Welfare and Involvement by 72%. It is interesting to note that more organizations work to promote child health and development (86%) or community welfare and involvement (72%), than child care and education (75%) or community development and awareness (68%), while the opposite is apparent for the family. Actions for family education and awareness (76%) are higher than those for family health and welfare (72%). In addition, the organizations also assist children (60%) and families (56%) at risk, and undertake advocacy for the community (47%), children (44%) and families (33%).

Young Child Programmes

Those organizations working in the Child Health and Development sector seem to give more attention to child development and health activities as to nutrition activities. However, early childhood development (63%) and health care (58%) are the two activities chosen the most often. The wide range of actions demonstrates the many and varied needs of children in the region. Of the two activities chosen the least often, oral rehydration was nevertheless attended to by 21% of the organizations, while 9% were concerned with AIDS.

In the Child Care and Education sector, there are again a wide range of activities, each attended to by between a sixth and over half of the organizations. Preschool education, that is educating and caring for children above the age of 3, is covered by 57% of the organizations, while infant care falls in the realm of activities of 20%. More organizations provide non-formal centre-based programmes (41%), home-based programmes (35%) or recreational facilities (31%) than formal childcare centres (27%). Over a sixth of the organizations focus on institutionalized children (22%), child safety (17%), disabled children (16%) or special education (15%). A small number are concerned with child adoption (14%), while only 10% provide foster care. In this sector, the division between care and education is a fine one, depending on the age of the children and the attitudes that caregivers, educators and parents have about the role of education in the development of the child between 0 and 6.

Between 3 and 30% of the organizations work in the Child at Risk sector. This sector can be divided into three categories: activities for children with developmental/health difficulties, those for children abused by others, activities for children in difficult situations. Children with developmental and behavioral difficulties (both 23%) fall in the first category, child abuse/neglect (30%) and child labour (10%) in the second, and care for children with special needs (24%), street children (16%), orphans (14%), and children of war/conflict (8%) in the third. A quarter of the organizations work with children with emotional difficulties. Child pornography and children with AIDS, the two categories chosen the least, are nevertheless attented to by 3% of the organizations.

The final sector of activities specifically dealing with children, Child Advocacy, was attended to by between 25% and 40% of the organizations. 38% work to promote children's rights, while 34% work in their own countries to promote child protection practices, and 26% to advocate the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Family Programmes

Actions of the organizations working in the Family Health and Welfare sector include both health and welfare components. Of primary importance is the welfare of the mother and infant (59%), while the well-being of the whole family through primary health care is attended to by 32%. Family guidance, family planning assistance and family support groups are provided by over 20% of the organizations, while teenage pregnancy, health centres and family services are attended to by over 16%.

When working in the Family Education and Awareness sector, two thirds of the organizations provide education for parents/caregivers, while over a third works in the fields of parent/child interaction and child-rearing. Health and nutrition education receive nearly equal attention. Most of the organizations focus more on responsible parenthood (33%) and on the father's role (28%) than on parent-to-be education (15%). Finally, it is clear from the responses that these organizations see their role more in providing education related to the child than in providing general education, such as literacy courses (13%).

In the Family at Risk sector, poverty is the concern of the most organizations (42%), followed by single-parent families (33%) and the unemployed (21%). Teenage parents are assisted by 20% of the organizations and minorities by 11%.

The responses concerned with the Family Advocacy sector indicate that the organizations' first priority are human rights (22%) and family protection issues (19%), followed by health protection (17%) concerns.

Community Programmes

In the Community Welfare and Involvement sector, social services (46%) and community-based preschool/care (30%) were chosen most often. Health services, home visits, youth programmes and social welfare were undertaken by nearly a quarter of the organizations. Community-based preschool/care (30%) and formal preschool care (22%) are provided by more organizations than parent-based preschool care or workplace childcare (both 17%).

In general, in the Community Development and Awareness sector, responses indicate that more focus is placed on social welfare and social mobilization than on physical and resource improvements for the community as a whole: sociocultural (43%), socioeconomic (28%) environments and awareness raising (also 28%) versus community health (26%), skills training (19%) and social mobilization (18%).

Between a sixth and a quarter of the organizations work in the Community Livelihood sector. Women's programmes (27%), leadership training and human resource development (each 22%) were chosen most often. Rural development and environmental protection are undertaken by 16% of the organizations.

The responses related to the Community Advocacy sector indicate that the organizations' first concern are the rights and protection (both 35%) of children. Over a sixth of the organizations promote human rights (23%) and general health policy (15%), whereas family legislation (13%) and population policy (8%) are less often targeted.

Services, funding & information sources

The Questionnaire also solicited information on services provided by the organizations, their funding sources, budgets and information sources. These responses provide a clearer picture of the organizations working with children, families and communities.

The services provided the most often range from documentation/information activities (91%), advisory/support services (47%) and counselling/guidance services (38%) to provision of equipment/supplies (10%), help/support and legal services (both 8%). The range of services provided reflects the variety of clients who depend on such activities, from individuals working with young children, to NGOs, governments, research institutes and other welfare organizations. Among the documentation/information activities most often provided are training/workshops (80%), conferences/seminars (74%), documentation/resource center (54%), library (51%), audiovisual and publications services (both 44%).

Only 150 organizations responded to the question on funding sources. Such sources range from national governments (56%), foreign aid programmes (43%), private donations (39%) and fundraising (36%) to NGOs (32%) and foundations (25%). Membership fees and funds received from intergovernmental agencies (both 16%) are also significant sources, while publications (8%) and industry (5%) are limited sources of funding. Responses thus indicate that the need for funding requires resourcefulness in accessing a variety of funding sources.

As only 159 organizations responded to the question on the organization's budget, it is not possible to indicate exactly how much is available for early childhood care and education activities and related services in Latin America and the Caribbean. The total sum of annual budgets indicated is US$ 695,589,000. While the actual figure for each organization varies greatly, the approximate average figure of US$ 4,374,770 per organization represents a considerable amount, when comparing it with the per capita GNP of most countries in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Over two third of the organizations obtain information for their work from governmental agencies, international and national/local NGOs and schools/universities. UN agencies and training organizations provide information to 55% of the organizations, while research institutes and foundations are information sources for nearly half of the organizations. Between 30% and 40% of the organizations seek more specialized information from a range of other organizations, such as community groups, hospitals, professional associations and women's groups.

Obstacles and objectives

The actions and programmes of the various organizations in the field of early childhood have helped them identify common problems and objectives in performing their activities. To explore these difficulties and goals, three analysis questions were included in the survey solliciting information about major obstacles encountered in the course of activities, major elements of good early childhood programmes and major successful actors in the field. Of the organizations responding to the survey, 60% answered these questions.

The first question asked the respondents to list the five major obstacles encountered in implementing early childhood activities. Lack of funds (74%) was the most pressing problem, followed by bureaucracy (51%), lack of staff (47%), attitudes of leaders (32%), lack of technical support and political instability (both 28%). Three other obstacles were also cited: target group's lack of interest (24%), cultural and social differences (22%) and differences of opinion about early childhood care and education (20%).

The second question sollicited information on the five essential elements that make up successful early childhood programmes. Taking a multifaceted view of child development (70%) was the most important element, followed by encouraging parent and community involvement in the planning, management and evaluation of programmes (64%), respecting and adjusting to different environments (58%), allowing children to learn to be creative, cooperate, solve problems, share, socialize, play and grow (52%), and looking toward approaches and models that are financially feasible and cost effective (51%). Between 20% and 42% of the respondents also felt that the following four elements are essential: trying to reach the largest possible number of children and families in difficult conditions, allowing parents to learn more about the needs of young children, acting as a catalyst and coordinator for family and community programmes, and offering opportunities for community members to acquire skills in preschool management and administration.

The partners

When undertaking their activities, many organizations recognize the benefits of working with partners to reach the goals identified. National/local NGOs are the partners of the largest number of organizations (47%), followed closely by governmental agencies (45%). International NGOs, schools/universities, community groups, training organizations and UN agencies are called upon by over a third of the organizations, while cooperatives and trade unions are the partners of 10%. A range of other organizations (such as hospitals/medical centers, research institutes, women's and parents' groups, and foundations) were also identified as partners by a quarter of the organizations.

The final analysis question in the survey turned the focus to organizations' opinions regarding the most successful actors/partners undertaking early childhood actions in Latin America and the Caribbean. Asked to select the five most successful partners, respondents chose national/local NGOs (58%), governmental agencies (40%), religious organizations (37%), community groups and UN agencies (both 34%) and international NGOs (32%). Other actors chosen were schools/universities (26%), women's groups (19%), foundations, parents' groups and training organizations (each 17%). The actors cited least often were trade unions, research institutes and youth groups (each under 5%).

Complementary approaches

The results of this survey illustrate the complementary nature of the approaches and actions of organizations in the field of early childhood care, development and education. The activities of the organizations included in this Directory clearly emphasize the interdependence between actions aimed at children, those focusing on the family and those concerned with the community. These actions take into account the physical, intellectual, sociocultural and economic aspects of the environment the child lives in; thus involving aspects that not only concern the child itself, but also his immediate family and his community.

From this survey, it is apparent that topics which have captured the attention of organizations working in Latin America and the Caribbean in the last decades, such as child protection, early childhood development, mother and infant welfare or human rights, are still of great importance. In addition, this survey also shows that such organizations have been able to respond rapidly to emerging critical issues, such as poverty, street children, teenage parents and family legislation.

It is only by comparing these results with those of future studies that it will be possible to better understand the vital role, contributions and achievements of these varied organizations in actions in favour of the young child, the family and the community.

Early Childhood in Latin America and the Caribbean: Challenges and Opportunities

Latin America and the Caribbean

Latin America and the Caribbean is a dynamic and culturally, economically and ethnically diverse region, including countries at different stages of political and economic development. The region's population has nearly trebled since the Second World War, reaching 459 million in 1993 (Grant, 1995). Latin America as a whole has shifted from a continent largely populated by villagers to one of people concentrated in major urban centres, representing nearly three quarters of the region's population. It is thus the most urbanized continent in the developing world. Urbanization throughout the region is proceeding faster than the growth of employment and basic services, and is straining the available economic and social facilities and infrastructures. One result has been the growth of spontanous slums and shanty towns in the large urban areas of many countries in the region..

The region is also characterized by extreme imbalances. Gross national product per capita (1992 US dollars) ranges from $ 330 in Guyana to $ 12 070 in the Bahamas. Although per capita income is higher than that of other developing regions, the region is marked by the persistence of greater degrees of income inequalities than other regions. In many countries of the region, society remains divided: on one hand, middle and upper classes enjoy a standard of living close to that of industrialized countries, and on the other, a vast number of people, representing 41% of the region's population, live at subsistance level. These disparities are clearly reflected in great differences in access to basic services (food, health, education, welfare), in levels of socio-economic development from country to country, and in all general indicators of social well-being: infant mortality, education, access to safe water and sanitation, housing, employment.

There are currently more than 55 million children under five living in Latin America and the Caribbean, representing 12% of the region's population, and 167 million under sixteen years of age, or 37% of the population in the region. The regional context in which children grow up is changing. The great majority of children are and will be born in urban areas, raised in small family units and live in poverty-stricken environments (Collier et al., 1992).

During the last decade as many countries moved from military dictatorships to democracies with liberal policies, economic progress has been achieved. Unfortunately, this development has been at high social cost and the number of poor people is growing in the region. The poor are not only materially poor, they also have more limited access to services, lower health and nutrition standards, reduced educational opportunities and are at greater risk from political violence. Less public spending on social services and diminishing family income have had a negative impact on the quality of care available to children. As a result, although under five mortality rate has currently decreased to the level of industrialised countries in the 1960's, being the lowest of the developing regions today, child survival is still a major problem in the region.

However, a growing awareness among political leaders of the problems in the region has resulted in a number of countries starting to adopt and implement policies favourable to child care, education and development, in part as a response to the 1990 World Summit for Children. Many Latin American and Caribbean countries have thus taken initiatives to improve the lives of young children and their families. Furthermore, all countries in the region have ratified the Convention on the Rigths of the Child.

Children in Latin America and the Caribbean

> Children are not only the most poverty-stricken population group, but they also constitute the human resources that in the near future will be responsible for consolidating the development of democracy. (IACI, 1991)

> Children are not only the most poverty-stricken population group, but they also constitute the human resources that in the near future will be responsible for consolidating the development of democracy. (IACI, 1991)

Health & nutrition

Despite progress in terms of food production and increase in daily calorie intake, hunger and malnutrition still remain important problems in many countries of the region. The situation is particularly alarming for preschool children. Although only 11 % of the children under five are under weight, some 20% of the 55 million preschool children in Latin America are malnourished today (Musgrove, 1993). Parents, health workers and communities must receive basic nutrition information and be trained to monitor children's growth. Also needed is the promotion of improved health for pregnant women, and the encouragement of breast-feeding and appropriate weaning habits.

A majority of children in Latin America and the Caribbean are likely victims of diarrhoea, pneumonia, nutritional deficiencies and other common infections. Illiteracy, poor sanitation and housing conditions, inadequate safe water supplies and health care infrastructures strongly influence the quality of child health conditions. Infant mortality rates are still high in many countries and a large number of children at risk have not yet been reached. Furthermore, the spread of epidemics (e.g. cholera) and AIDS in some countries are an evidence of the precarious health conditions in many parts of the region and of the strains put on health services.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, evolutions in demographic, health and nutritional trends are transforming the demands made on health services. Service delivery has not yet adjusted sufficiently, however, to these changes (IADB, 1993). Promotion of breast feeding, provision of safe water, better housing, better hygiene, behavioural changes through education are needed, as are the expansion of primary health services and family support, together with programs providing food, health care, and education to vulnerable children and their families (Musgrove, 1993).

The following factors also contribute to the poor health situation prevailing in a majority of countries in the region: poverty and underdevelopment, poor education, recurrent childhood diseases, civil unrest and conflicts. Nevertheless, there have been important improvements. The under-five mortality rate has decreased from 157 in 1960 to 50 in 1992. Today 74% of the population has access to health services and approximately 80% of children are immunised against the major childhood diseases (tuberculosis, diphtheria, whooping cough, tetanus, polio and measles) (Grant, 1995).

Early childhood education

The rapid expansion of early childhood education over the last decade has been one of the most important changes in the education sector of the countries of the region, as well as the increase in attendance rates, particularly among the 5-to-6 year old population. (Schiefelbien et al., 1993). Though the number of preschools has increased in recent years, few young children have access to formal programmes. The availability of early childhood education has so far favoured middle and upper classes in urban areas, despite a certain headway in rural areas through non-formal programmes.

> Social mobilisation factors, the pressures of urbanism, and the incorporation of women into the workforce have produced an accelerated demand for children's services that independently the education sector cannot meet. The greatest demand is for the creation of new structures responsible for appropriate care of children. In relation to this, we still must make the curricular contents adequate to satisfy the needs of the children, the parents and the community. (Fujimoto, 1989)

However, problems such as the high percentage of children who have not yet been incorporated in early childhood programmes, the concentration of availability in urban areas, the significant differences in the quality of services provided, the training and remuneration of staff and lastly, the disparity of teaching approaches, remain to be solved in the years to come.

> Early childhood education is increasingly important since children need to satisfy their basic learning needs from birth. It is evident that the greater the satisfaction, the better their future learning development, and the lower the cost to the society to attain a specific level of knowledge or to overcome behavioural problems. (UNESCO, 1993)

The increasing number of women in the labor force suggests that other persons are assisting mothers in caring for young children. Early childhood education for most children in the region does not take place in formal institutions. There is, however, little information on the quality of the services provided by the non-formal system or even what actually constitutes this non-formal system (Reimers, 1992).

Changing social and family environments

Social structures in Latin America and the Caribbean illustrate the coexistence of traditional ways of life with 'modern' ones. Changes in family structure and socio-economic activities have increased the pressure for development of extra-familial child care and education. A shift away from the extended family towards the nuclear family has meant that fewer family members are immediately available as caretakers. In addition, women have joined the labour force in large numbers. The patriarchal family, however, with the household as the basic unit of reproduction, women in the private sphere and men in the public sphere, is still a common feature of family life.

> Latin American [and Caribbean] families, whether rural or urban, play an essential role in transmitting social values, in production processes, in the education and care of children, and also, in every activity pertaining to social development. However, family life is adversely affected by various conditions stemming from the region's particular situation. (UNESCO/UNICEF, 1987)

With expanding urbanisation, family structures and ways of bringing up children have changed. A third of men and women are married by the age of eighteen in the region. Political violence, increasing divorce rates and early mariages cause a rise in the number of families consisting of the mother and child, and a temporary or unstable presence of father, as well as single headed households (Jelin, 1991). Nearly a third of households in Latin America and the Caribbean are headed by women. Most are either single parents, heads of extended families, or elderly women living alone. The migration of men seeking employment that is not available in their place of origin has also lead to an increase in women-headed households.

Such social changes have been rapid, and have increased demand for housing, basic services and infrastructures. The difficult conditions faced by children and their families are on the increase. Children suffer from the social disintegration of the family, family instability (separation, divorce, or unwanted pregnancies), and adverse parental behavior (such as family violence). Parents who are not offered child care solutions and cannot afford to pay caregivers are forced to leave their children alone.

> This widespread practice of what Bornstein calls 'non-existent child care', in which infants or young children are simply left unattended while parents are otherwise engaged, seriously undermines healthy child development. (United Nations, 1995)

Children at work ... and on the streets

> Abandoned children are the offspring of poverty. Impoverished communities that cannot look after their children simply leave them on the streets. (Romero, 1991)

The number of children forced to survive on their own has greatly increased during the last decades. In most cities, there has been a steep rise in the number of street children. Estimates of the number of children working on Brazil's streets vary from 7 to 10 million of which over a million do not have families to go home to at night. It seems, however, that most of the children on the streets are still with their families, and are important sources of household income.

> Children in and of the streets are the growing urban tragedy as their lives are spent in environments in which their mental and physical health is permanently at risk. Among them are the glue-sniffers who inhale toxic vapors as a survival strategy against cold and hunger; the sexually abused girls who are constantly replenishing the ranks of teen prostitution; and the child laborers who prematurely engage in a diversity of work activities unsuited for their age. (IACI, 1991)

The economic basis for survival has thus deteriorated. Child labour is for the poor an important part of family income. Over 30 % of school-age urban children in poor Latin American and Caribbean communities work. Child labour is concentrated in three sectors: agriculture, the urban informal sector and domestic service. Working children are often unschooled and illiterate, work as long and hard as their parents and are exposed to dangerous machines, chemicals and abuse. (ILO, 1989).

Armed conflicts and unrest

War, oppression and political unrest have plagued various parts of Latin America and the Caribbean for many years. The demand for land and the quest for remunerative crops underlies rural conflicts, drug wars and violent responses from security forces. Thousands of people have been forced to flee their homes in search of safety and peace in other areas or countries. Most victims of these upheavals are civilians, in particular women and children. Unknown numbers of children have been killed, wounded, abandoned, orphaned or taken as hostages.

Military expenditure in Latin American and the Caribbean was high during the military dictatorships, but this has changed. Today, most countries in the region spend less on the military than on health and education (Grant, 1994). In areas where civil wars still prevail, there have been attempts to focus on the well-being of children; e.g., 'days of tranquillity' promoted by UNICEF in El Salvador allowed many children to be immunised (Grant, 1991).

Governmental & non-governmental involvement

> Some groups, especially women and children, are much more 'invisible' to governments and official experts than should ideally be the case. Their status is a subordinate one, and what they think and feel is usually unrecorded. (Collier et al, 1992)

Changes in living conditions, social relationships and family structures have led to changes in access, availability and provision of services and care for young children. Prior to 1970, governments took little interest in early childhood, leaving the field to NGOs and communities who catered to the needs of children in the 4-6 age group. Recent years have seen an increase in both governmental and non-governmental attention to early childhood programmes. The private sector continues to be important in catering to income groups who can afford early childhood education. Although growing, free state-run programmes are still limited. Nevertheless, the public sector seeks to alleviate educational and social deficits of poor communities, by promoting programmes to train families and communities both to provide integral attention to children from birth, and to facilitate the child's transition from home to school, and reduce repetition and drop-out rates (UNESCO/UNICEF, 1993).

On the political front, significant progress has been made towards government support for early childhood. Many governments have realized the importance of placing early childhood on the national agenda, and have consequently adopted policies and measures to improve services for young children and families. Nevertheless, funding levels have remained low as primary education and other socio-economic concerns retain priority. In 1988 only four countries invested more than 0.5 % of their education budget in preschool education (Collier et al., 1992).

Most countries in the region have or are in the process of developing National Programmes of Action as a follow up to the World Summit for Children. Plans of action include health and nutrition, water and sanitation, housing, environment, income and employment, community development and education. In addition, ratification of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child by all countries in the region has greatly strengthened interest in children's issues. A concern for the well-being of the child is also reflected in the Major Project in the Field of Education in Latin America and the Caribbean, a comprehensive intra-regional educational reform and development strategy designed to meet basic educational needs by the year 2000. (Collier, 1992). The Major Project gives priority to education of the least privileged and vulnerable groups, living in rural and marginal urban sectors. Among the seven targeted groups are 'children under 6 years of age, living in poor social and economic conditions which cause irreversible consequences on personal cognitive development' (UNESCO 1993).

In general, state-run programmes reach only few children and get little priority in national budgets. Therefore governments have encouraged and supported initiatives to broaden early childhood programmes through informal, integrated methods, involving parents and communities. Feasibility is not the only advantage of these informal programmes. Experience suggests that family and community participation in early childhood programmes increases the chances of programme impact and sustainability.

> Parents and community members have a far stronger influence on small children than teachers or secondary care-givers, making relationships with parents essential to the success of early childcare programmes. (Guttman, 1994)

Many Latin American and Caribbean countries have developed a number of innovative alternatives based on an integrated approach to child care (including health, nutrition and education) involving the family and community. In collaboration with community organisations and early childhood centres, programmes have been able to reach many children at a relatively low cost. Without the involvement of parents and communities, however, efforts to improve early childhood care and education in the region are unlikely to be effective.

Early Childhood Care and Education in Latin America and the Caribbean: what future?

> During this decade, the state must join efforts with a fully developed civil society. The challenge is especially important where the welfare of children is concerned. Children must be assigned top priority in the actions taken by the state and by civil society to cope with the current problems. (Venezuelan Ministry for the Family, 1990)

The challenges of the 1990s are many, as population and poverty continue to grow. Problems such as economic debt, political change, civil conflicts, unemployment, urbanisation, social disintegration, and an increasing number of poor are still common in most Latin American and Caribbean countries. These problems concern children and families directly but also indirectly, in that their multiplicity limits governmental funding for effective programming. Socio-economic reforms that combine social equity with sustainable long-term growth, as well as national policies for early childhood education, are necessary to spread more equally the available benefits and to develop the potentials of young children in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Nevertheless, many opportunities exist to meet these challenges as a multitude of organisations and communities have emerged to look after young children.

> Each situation encourages active participation of social organizations together with educational staff and other representatives of the community (parents, students, entrepreneurs, civil and religious organizations) in initiatives designed to meet basic needs relevant to local demands and requirements.
> Co-operation should be perceived as a strategy to encourage progress and complementarity of ideas and efforts. By accepting that the reality of each country is integral to the future of the region, regional and international co-operation then becomes one of the key factors for the achievement of higher and equal development for all. (UNESCO, 1993)"

Progress has been achieved as governments realise the importance of focusing on the well-being of children, initiate intergovernmental co-operation and recognise the contribution of NGOs and communities. The support which the Convention on the Rights of the Child has received from all governments in the region is an indication of the importance attached to the welfare of children. The political will would now seem to exist in Latin American and Caribbean countries to allocate resources to programmes seeking to improve the living conditions of the region's children.

INFORMATION LISTS / BIBLIOGRAPHY

UNESCO National Commissions in Latin America and the Caribbean

UNESCO National Commissions fulfil several roles. They serve as advisory organs for their respective countries, assisting in preparations for and participation in UNESCO meetings and conferences, in the elaboration of government positions concerning UNESCO programmes and in the evaluation of such programmes, and in national projects contributing to the implementation of UNESCO programmes.

The Commissions are organs of liaison with other governmental authorities, universities and research institutions, NGOs, national professionnal associations, trade unions, women and youth organizations and individual experts. They serve as executive bodies participating in UNESCO country projects and in national programmes, activities and studies.

The Commissions are also information organs. In this role they may issue regular bulletins and other publications, translate UNESCO publications into local languages, organize seminars, meetings, exhibitions and other events, co-operate with the press, radio and television in their respective countries, and use various other means to inform the general and specialized public of UNESCO's aims and activities, and of related national activities.

United Nations Information Centres in Latin America and the Caribbean

The UN Department of Public Information regularly provides all its Information Centres with press releases and news-oriented information kits, periodicals and books published by the Department and some of the specialized Agencies. These include Development Forum, the UN Chronicle and the Yearbook of the United Nations. Statistical publications are available at the Centres for reference only. Some of the Centres also produce their own newspapers.

All Information Centres are official depository libraries of the UN and receive major official UN documents, including summary and verbatim record of all UN meetings, special reports and studies prepared by substantive departments of the UN Secretariat. They also stock United Nations posters, wallsheets, and photographs. From time to time, Centres can provide speakers on UN activities for special NGO programmes.

ANNEXES

The Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Convention on the Rights of the Child was adopted by the United Nations on November 20th 1989 and entered into force on September 2nd 1990 after being ratified by 20 States. As of January 2nd 1996, 186 countries had either signed the Convention or become States Parties to it by ratification or accession. When ratified by a State, the Convention becomes binding law in it.

The Convention seeks to balance the rights of the child with the rights and duties of parents or others who have responsibilities for child survival, development and protection, and gives the child the right to participate in decisions affecting both the present and the future. The fifty-four articles of the Convention describe the individual rights of any person under 18 to develop his or her full potential, free from hunger and want, neglect, exploitation or other abuses.

The inherent strength of the new Convention lies in its flexibility, its capacity to accommodate the many different approaches of nations in pursuit of a common goal. It has not evaded the sensitive issues, but has found means to adjust to the different cultural, religious and other values which address universal child needs in their own ways.

Main provisions of the Convention

Preamble
The preamble reaffirms the fact that children because of their vulnerability, need special care and protection, and places special emphasis on the primary caring and protective responsibility of the family. It also reaffirms the need for legal and other protection of the child before and after birth, the importance of respect for the cultural values of the child's community, and the vital role of international co-operation in securing children's rights.

Definition of a child (article 1)
A child is recognized as a person under 18, unless national laws recognize the age of majority earlier.

Non-discrimination (article 2)
All rights apply to all children without exception. It is the State's obligation to protect children from any form of discrimination and to take positive action to promote their rights.

Best interests of the child (article 3)
All actions concerning the child shall take full account of his or her best interests. The State shall provide the child with adequate care when parents, or others charged with that responsibility, fail to do so.

Implementation of rights (article 4)
The State must do all it can to implement the rights contained in the Convention.

Parental guidance and the child's evolving capacities (article 5)
The State must respect the rights and responsibilities of parents and the extended family to provide guidance for the child which is appropriate to her or his evolving capacities.

Survival and development (article 6)
Every child has the inherent right to life, and the State has an obligation to ensure the child's survival and development.

Name and nationality (article 7)
The child has the right to a name at birth. The child has also the right to acquire a nationality and, as far as possible, to know his or her parents and be cared for by them.

Preservation of identity (article 8)
The State has an obligation to protect, and if necessary re-establish, basic aspects of the child's identity (including name, nationality and family ties).

Separation from parents (article 9)
The child has a right to live with his or her parents unless this is deemed incompatible with the child's best interests. The child also has the right to maintain contacts with both parents if separated from one or both.

Family reunification (article 10)
Children and their parents have the right to leave any country and to enter their own for purposes of reunion or the maintenance of the child-parent relationship.

Illicit transfer and non-return (article 11)
The State has an obligation to prevent and remedy the kidnapping or retention of children abroad by a parent or third party.

The child's opinion (article 12)
The child has the right to express his or her opinion freely and to have that opinion taken into account in any matter or procedure affecting the child.

Freedom of expression (article 13)
The child has the right to express his or her views, obtain information , make ideas or information known, regardless of frontiers.

Freedom of thought, conscience and religion (article 14)
The State shall respect the child's right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, subject to appropriate parental guidance.

Freedom of association (article 15)
Children have a right to meet with others, and to join or form associations.

Protection of privacy (article 16)
Children have the right to protection from interference with their privacy, family, home and correspondence, and from libel or slander.

Access to appropriate information (article 17)
The State shall ensure that information and materials from a diversity of sources is accessible to children, and it shall encourage the mass media to disseminate information which is of social and cultural benefit to the child, and take steps to protect him of her from harmful materials.

Parental responsibilities (article 18)
Parents have the joint primary responsibility for raising the child, and the State shall support them in this. The State shall provide appropriate assistance to parents in child-raising.

Protection from abuse and neglect (article 19)
The State shall protect the child from all forms of maltreatment by parents or others responsible for the care of the child and establish appropriate social programmes for the prevention of abuse and the treatment of victims.

Protection of a child without family (article 20)
The State is obliged to provide special protection for a child deprived of a family environment and to ensure that appropriate alternative family care or institutional placement is available in such cases. Efforts to meet this obligation shall pay due regard to the child's cultural background.

Adoption (article 21)
In countries where adoption is recognized and/or allowed, it shall only be carried out in the best interests of the child, and then only with the authorization of competent authorities, and with safeguards for the child.

Refugee children (article 22)
Special protection shall be granted to a refugee child or to a child seeking refugee status. It is the State's obligation to co-operate with competent organizations which provide such protection and assistance.

Disabled children (article 23)
A disabled child has the right to special care, education and training to help him or her enjoy a full and decent life in dignity and achieve the greatest degree of self-reliance and social integration possible.

Health and health services (article 24)
The child has a right to the highest standard of health and medical care attainable. States shall place special emphasis on the provision of primary and preventive health care, public health education and the reduction of infant mortality. They shall encourage international co-operation in this regard and strive to see that no child is deprived of access to effective health services.

Periodic review of placement (article 25)
A child placed by the State for reasons of care, protection or treatment is entitled to have that placement evaluated regularly.

Social security (article 26)
The child has the right to benefit from social security including social insurance.

Standard of living (article 27)
Every child has the right to a standard of living adequate for his or her physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development. Parents have the primary responsibility to ensure that this responsibility can be fulfilled, and is. State responsibility can include material assistance to parents and their children.

Education (article 28)
The child has a right to education, and the State's duty is to ensure that primary education is free and compulsory, to encourage different forms of secondary education accessible to every child and to make higher education available to all on the basis of capacity. School discipline shall be consistent with the child's rights and dignity. The State shall engage in international co-operation to implement this right.

Aims of education (article 29)
Education shall aim at developing the child's personality, talents and mental and physical abilities to the fullest extent. Education shall prepare the child for an active adult life in a free society and foster respect for the child's parents, his or her own cultural identity, language and values, and for the cultural background and values of others.

Children of minorities or indigenous populations (article 30)
Children of minority communities and indigenous populations have the right to enjoy their own culture and to practise their own religion and language.

Leisure, recreation and cultural activities (article 31)
The child has the right to leisure, play and participation in cultural and artistic activities.

Child labour (article 32)
The child has the right to be protected from work that threatens his or her health, education or development. The State shall set minimum ages for employment and regulate working conditions.

Drug abuse (article 33)
Children have the right to protection from the use of narcotic and psychotropic drugs, and from being involved in their production or distribution.

Sexual exploitation (article 34)
The State shall protect children from sexual exploitation and abuse, including prostitution and involvement in pornography.

Sale, trafficking and abduction (article 35)
It is the State's obligation to make every effort to prevent the sale, trafficking and abduction of children.

Other forms of exploitation (article 36)
The child has the right to protection from all forms of exploitation prejudicial to any aspects of the child's welfare not covered in articles 32, 33, 34 and 35.

Torture and deprivation of liberty (article 37)
No child shall be subjected to torture, cruel treatment or punishment, unlawful arrest or deprivation of liberty. Both capital punishment and life imprisonment without the possibility of release are prohibited for offences committed by persons below 18 years. A child who is detained shall have legal and other assistance as well as contact with his or her family.

Armed conflicts (article 38)
State Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure that children under 15 play no direct part in hostilities. No child below 15 shall be recruited into the armed forces. States shall also ensure the protection and care of children affected by armed conflict as described in relevant international law.

Rehabilitative care (article 39)
The State has an obligation to ensure that child victims of armed conflicts, torture, neglect, maltreatment or exploitation receive appropriate treatment for their recovery and social reintegration.

Administration of juvenile justice (article 40)
A child in conflict with the law has the right to treatment which promotes the child's sense of dignity and worth, takes the child's age into account and aims at his or her reintegration into society. The child is entitled to basic guarantees as well as legal or other assistance for his or her defence.

Respect for higher standards (article 41)
Wherever standards set in applicable national and international law relevant to the rights of the child are higher than those in the Convention, the higher standards shall always apply.

Implementation and entry into force (articles 42 to 54)

The provisions of these articles notably foresee:

- the State's obligation to make the rights contained in the Convention widely known to both adults and children.
- the setting up of a Committee on the Rights of the Child composed of ten experts, which will consider reports that State Parties to the Convention are to submit two years after ratification and every five years thereafter.
- States Parties are to make their reports widely available to the general public.
- The Committee may propose that special studies be undertaken on specific issues relating to the rights of the child, and may make its evaluations known to each State Party concerned as well as to the UN General Assembly.
- To foster the effective implementation of the Convention and to encourage international co-operation, the specialized agencies of the United Nations will be able to attend the meetings of the Committee. Together with any other body recognized as "competent", including NGOs in consultative status with UN agencies, they can submit pertinent information to the Committee and be asked to advise on the optimal implementation of the Convention.

Statistical tables: explanatory note

The data in these tables gives an overview of the basic social and economic statistics available by country, which directly concern the 0-5 age group and their families.

The Young Child

The status of young children is reported in terms of the under-five mortality rate and the percentage who are malnourished. Under-five mortality not only indicates the probability of a child surviving to the age of five, but also more generally reflects the risk of survivors falling ill. The percentage of malnourished children reflects the level of malnutrition, which both slows physical growth and retards the psycho-social development of the child. It also reflects the health and nutritional situations of all members of the population.

Children under 5: Total number of children, both boys and girls, who have not reached their fifth birthday. (Source: UNICEF)

Under-5 mortality rate: Number of deaths of children under five years of age per 1000 live births. (Source: UNICEF)

Malnourished children under 5: Percentage of children, under the age of five, below minus two standard deviations from median weight for age of the reference population.
(Source: UNDP / World Bank)

The Family

The family's impact on a young child is illustrated in terms of total fertility, and male and female literacy rates. High fertility generally reflects closely spaced births, which in the context of low income, leads to the exhaustion of mothers and the division of their limited time and resources among many children. Female literacy has a major bearing not only on psychosocial development, but also on the provision of appropriate health and nutrition support to the young child. The educational level of mothers has been linked significantly with falling fertility rates, decreasing infant and maternal mortality, enhanced levels of infant and child development, and improved social outcomes for children. Obviously, the impact of the family on the child is not in any way confined to these variables.

Literacy rate: Percentage of the male and female population aged 15 and over who can read and write. (Source: UNESCO)

Total fertility rate: Number of children who would be born per woman, if she were to live to the end of her child-bearing years, conforming to the existing fertility pattern of the country.
(Source: UNICEF)

The Community

Access to health care services and safe water, and Gross National Product (GNP) generally indicate the community support available. Health services provide direct support for the young child, such as vaccinations and medicine, as well as support and advice for the family. Safe, clean water supplies for drinking, cooking and bathing help prevent the spread of diseases. GNP is a broad measure of the economic situation of a country and reflects the likely existence of community infrastructures including schools and roads, and its capacity to finance early childhood programmes.

GNP per capita US$ 1992: The gross national product estimated at current market prices in US dollars. (Source: World Bank)

Access to health care services: Percentage of the population that can reach appropriate local health care within one hour's walk or travel. (Source: UNICEF)

Access to safe water: Percentage of the population with reasonable access to safe water supply. (Source: UNICEF)

Pre-Primary Education

The 1990 Jomtien World Conference on Education for All strongly advocated that all countries set targets for the 1990s in terms of the learning achievements of children. Measures of enrolment in pre-primary education are used as interim indicators of learning achievement and preparedness for primary schooling. Pre-primary education programmes are intended to introduce young children to a school-like environment. They are concerned with the social, mental and physical development of young children, and often include activities designed to prepare children for the learning of reading, writing and mathematics. Research has shown that children who have experienced pre-primary programmes are more likely than other children to remain in primary school and achieve good results.

Age-group enrolled: Population age-group that according to the national regulations can be enrolled in pre-primary education. (Source: UNESCO)

Pre-primary gross enrolment ratio: Total enrolment in pre-primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population age-group corresponding to the national regulations for this level. (Source: UNESCO)

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child provides an indication of the efforts undertaken by countries to implement the Convention and to provide better services and environments for children. Once ratified, the articles of the Convention become of a binding nature and governments have to submit within two years a report on the measures taken to impliment the Convention. The ratification offers a legal instrument and means to individuals, journalists and NGOs to remind decision makers of the commitments they made.

The Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Latin America and the Caribbean describes 218 non-governmental and governmental organizations, based in 38 countries in Latin America and the Caribbean, involved in early childhood care and education. It contains both analytical and descriptive sections. Articles give an overview of the situation of children and their families in Latin America and the Caribbean and offer an insight into early childhood care and education efforts and strategies in the region. The organization profiles describe the major activities within the Young Child, Family and Community programmes of the organizations. Pertinent data on agencies and organizations involved in Latin America and the Caribbean and on various information sources on childhood issues is also provided. Finally, indexes are included to facilitate information retrieval.

The Directory aims to encourage and facilitate communication and information sharing between institutions and individuals active in improving the situation of children worldwide. Through its publication, UNESCO offers a creative solution to the problem of information exchange on childhood issues, and gives a just insight into the national, regional and international contributions to early childhood activities in Latin America and the Caribbean.
